What are Cookies?

A cookie is a small text file that is saved in your computer or mobile device when you use the Service. When we talk about cookies in this Cookie Policy, this term includes technologies that we are using which serve a similar purpose, for example web beacons, tags and tracking pixels or software development kits (SDKs) in our mobile apps.

How do we use Cookies and how long do they last?

Cookie categories
Essential Cookies: These are required to enable core functionality and provide you with the service you have requested. Without these cookies, services that you have asked for cannot be provided. These are usually session cookies and expire when you close the browsing session or your app, or shortly thereafter.
Performance Cookies (Audience measurement): To analyse the use, performance and design of our Service, detect errors and improve user experience. For example, this type of cookie enables us to understand how often you are using our Service, to recognise that you have visited our websites before and to identify which parts of our Service and which sections of our website are most popular, for example by allowing us to see which pages visitors access most frequently and how much time visitors spend on each page. Functional Cookies (Content customisation): To deliver a better user experience, and build up customer usage patterns and profiles. For example, this type of cookie ensures that the information displayed when you use our Service (e.g. on your next visit to our website) will match up with your user preferences (such as language preferences, font size or auto-fill options). Advertising Cookies (Behavioural advertising): To personalise our website, deliver customized advertisements to you, or contact you directly where you have separately consented to such communications, in a way which is relevant to you and which matches your interests by, for example, using information about services purchased on our website. Note that by disabling cookies that we use by default, you will not be able to use our Service.

Third parties using cookies through our Service for their own purposes

Our Service uses some cookies that are not controlled by us. This may occur when the part of the Service you are using makes use of a third-party analytics or marketing automation/management tool or includes content displayed from a third party. You should review the privacy and cookie policies of these parties to find out how they use cookies and the information they collect through cookies.

How to manage cookies?

We rely on your consent to use cookies that are not essential. We will seek your consent when you first access our Service (for example via our apps or our websites): you are free to refuse to consent to some or all of these non-essential cookies.

You can withdraw your consent at any time, by changing your preferences.
